STOP USING WATER FROM OLD TOWN, M.I.L.

Order issued in New London—Underground Source of Supply is Contaminated.

Health Officer J. T. Black of New London on Monday condemned the water of the Old Town mill spring and informed the park commissioners that the water was unhealthy. The health officer ordered the commissioners to take proper steps for eliminating the spring as a drinking water supply.

The condemnation of the water is the result of an investigation conducted by the health department. For some time past the health officer had suspected the water because of location of the spring and the territory through which the stream passes was contaminated. Last January he sent a sample of the water to the Connecticut laboratory of the state board of health in Middletown for examination, which showed that the water had excellent physical properties, having no color, no odor, no sediment and no turbidity, the chemical constituents were defective, containing large quantities of chlorine, nitrates and bacteria.

Another examination of a sample of the water this month brought forth the following conclusions from the state laboratory: The high nitrate figure and the excessive chlorine show that the underground stream from which this spring derives its supply is receiving drainage contamination somewhere in its course and the results of the bacteriologic examination show that this contamination is very well filtered before it reached the spring. This water might be used for long time without causing disease, but it cannot be classed as a reliable source for drinking purposes until the source of the organic matter and the chlorine are located and removed and proved to be harmless as the intervening soil may at any time cause it to act as an efficient filter and allow dangerous material to enter the spring.

The spring has for numerous years had the reputation of containing excellent water. Hundreds of people have used the water in preference to the city supply, many coming from some distance with bottles for the water.

RUSSIAN PEASANTS BENEFIT BY WAR

Prohibition of the Sale of Vodka Has Brought Prosperity—More Savings Deposited in One Month Now Than Formerly in a Year.

Petrograd, April 12, via London, 5:01 p. m.—The opinion was expressed today by Pierre L. Bark, Russian minister of finance, that, economically considered, the war has been a blessing to the people of this country. Discussing the financial and social aspects of the conflict in an interview with a correspondent of The Associated Press, M. Bark said:

No Privation felt. "Notwithstanding the depressing and paralyzing effect of the war, the Russian peasant class is more prosperous than at any previous time in the history of the country. It is not difficult to account for this unusual fact. By virtue of the allowance made by the government to the families of soldiers, which exceeds the earning power of the soldiers, the total income of these families is greater than in times of peace. Thus, instead of feeling any privation as the result of the absence of the men and the loss of their services, the people are beginning to regard the war as a peculiar sort of Godsend which is giving them money for their pockets."

"What about vodka?" was asked of the minister. "It is the prohibition of the sale of vodka which is primarily responsible for the ameliorated condition of the peasant," he responded. "The slave through which all the Russians formerly disappeared now has been closed and the money is either spent for present necessities or saved for future use. It is not necessary to invent theories to explain why the Russian people should be more prosperous, for the fact is that this prosperity is everywhere noticeable. Before the war the average yearly savings deposited amounted to 30,000,000 to 40,000,000 rubles ($30,000,000 to $40,000,000) while in the month of January alone about 60,000,000 rubles ($60,000,000) was deposited."

"What about the crops?" was the next question.

Farmers Fortunate. "The farmers have been very fortunate in being compelled to hold their supply of grain on account of the difficulties of transportation, for grain is now at the highest price of the year. There is every reason to believe the farmers will soon be able to dispose of their grain in foreign markets and at a great advantage."

Discussing the conference in Paris of the finance ministers of Russia, France and Great Britain for the consideration of financial problems arising from the war, M. Bark said:

To Provide Grain for Allies. "One result was the formulation of an agreement with our allies to pool all the expenses of the war. In accordance with this understanding Russia is to draw upon Great Britain and France for money expended in the war, while our allies are to call upon Russia for grain which they need."

"This is an excellent arrangement for all concerned; for while Russia has enough resources she is in need of immediate capital and our allies, on the other hand, have more capital than supplies."

"I have already arranged a credit of 625,000,000 francs ($125,000,000) in France, and 25,000,000 pounds ($125,000,000) in England; which Russia is to use at any time the occasion requires. We are on the point of making use of part of the French credit."

In response to a question regarding the recent increase of 30 per cent. in the tariff, M. Bark said: "That is only a temporary affair, designed partly to make up for the loss in revenue from the vodka traffic. I do not believe that this temporary increase in the tariff will discourage foreign trade with Russia."

Increase in Trade Expected. "In fact, Russia looks for a tremendous increase in her trade with the United States and other countries to replace the German trade existing before the war. I am not an authority as to what kind of trade treaties will be concluded at the peace conference, but I am sure everything will be done to open the Russian market to these countries and not to permit it to slip back to Germany."

"There is now a particular opportunity for the United States, for she of all the countries to which we look for trade, is not crippled by the war."

M. Bark was asked what means were being employed to replace the revenues formerly derived from vodka. "The government is endeavoring to replace the revenue lost by the vodka traffic by a special tax on railroad transportation, matches, sugar and most ordinary commodities."

How Revenue Is Derived.

"The amount of this revenue exceeded 900,000,000 rubles ($900,000,000) he replied. "This is being replaced in a diversity of ways, including a special war tax on railroad transportation, matches, sugar and most ordinary commodities."

HELD UNION SERVICE AT METHODIST CHURCH.

Rev. H. J. Wyckoff Preacher Upon The Quest of the Best.

"What seek ye?" was the text of the sermon delivered by Rev. Herbert J. Wyckoff, pastor of the Second Congregational church, at the union service held at Trinity Methodist Episcopal church on Sunday evening. The service was led by Rev. Frederick W. Coleman, the pastor, and the choir of the four churches sang.

The congregation was large and deep interest was shown in Rev. Wyckoff's sermon, the subject of which was The Quest of the Best. Rev. G. G. Scriver, superintendent of the Methodist conference, led the responsive reading, and prayer was offered by Rev. Joel E. Stocum, D. D., of the center of the Second Congregational church, at the union service held at Trinity Methodist Episcopal church on Sunday evening. The service was led by Rev. Frederick W. Coleman, the pastor, and the choir of the four churches sang.

Rev. Mr. Wyckoff said that life is a quest. When Jesus asked the two disciples the question "What seek ye?" He was asking not some trivial matter, for He used those words because life is a quest. The quest in its beginning is a quest for something other than the things of this world. There comes a desire for that which is good over that which is bad.

If someone should ask you the question "What seek ye?" would you answer that you seek the things of this world? Would you not come to your mind the confession that after all there is something more than the things of this world? Would you not come to your mind the question because He wanted His disciples to understand the goal at which they were aiming. The one thing that is lacking in this world is the quest for Him. In answer to the question how shall one know when he has found the best? He shall know when he has found the best because nothing can draw him away from it.

Is it seeking the best in Jesus to believe the things about Jesus or to believe in Him? To believe in the words He says or to believe in what He means? Jesus asks the question "What seek ye?" because He wants us to know whether or not we are seeking better things.

On next Sunday morning Rev. Henry T. Arnold will occupy the pulpit at the Methodist church. There will be no evening service because it will be Conference Sunday.

WILL TAKE VOTE ON GIFT OF LAND.

Part of Riverside Park Is Needed for Steamship Terminal Project.

In a special city meeting held Friday morning the citizens of New London are to be given an opportunity to ratify the action of the court of common council in recommending a grant to the state of Connecticut of a portion of Riverside park lying between the tracks of the Central Vermont railway and the river, together with the riparian rights therein. The acquisition of the tract in question is considered essential to the ultimate success of the state steamship terminal.

It will not be essential to utilize the entire tract for some time and in the interval the public will be permitted to make use of the shore hereafter. Eventually the park front will be included in the industrial area of reclaimed land on which factory sites will be located about 18 acres of new land will thus be obtained.

DOUBLY PROVEN

Norwich Readers Can No Longer Doubt the Evidence.

This Norwich citizen testified long ago.

Told of quick relief—of undoubted benefit.

The facts are now confirmed.

Such testimony is complete—the evidence conclusive.

It forms convincing proof of merit.

Mrs. C. Bennett, 46 Palmer St., Norwich, says: "Some years ago one of my family suffered from backache. Every cold he caught settled on his kidneys and made the trouble worse. His kidneys were disordered, as was shown by the kidney secretions being irregular in passage. Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at N. D. Sevin & Son's Drug Store, brought prompt relief."

AT A LASTING EFFECT.

At a later interview Mrs. Bennett said: "Doan's Kidney Pills cured one of my family of kidney trouble some years ago and there has been no sign of it since. I willingly confirm my former endorsement of this remedy."

The vessels that met the scouts of Sherman's army when they reached the coast of Georgia, on their march to the sea. With some of our officers I visited a brigade of Sherman's army while it was encamped in its outskirts of Savannah soon after its arrival. Seeing an officer passing in the uniform of a major general, I inquired of a sentry who he was. Standing at salute, with evident pride in his commander, he replied General O. O. Howard commanding the army of the Tennessee. "Twenty-five years later I had the pleasure of introducing General O. O. Howard to a large audience in the Sunday School room of my church in Brooklyn. In doing this I mentioned the circumstances of my first meeting with General Howard, which was news to him as well as to the audience. That evening both of the great commanders, General Howard and General Slocum, addressed us. "Well do I remember what a gratification it was to my two sons and to many others to shake hands with these men who commanded the right and left wings of Sherman's army on its famous 'March to the Sea.'"

"At another time, while we were at Jacksonville, nearly 3000 Union soldiers who had been released from the Confederate prison at Andersonville came to Jacksonville on their way north. Such wretched specimens of humanity, caused by exposure, disease and starvation, I never saw before. Hundreds of them after being released, died on the day before they reached the transports that were to take them home."

More than 50 years have passed since the tidings were flashed across the country that Fort Sumter had been fired upon and that war had become a stern necessity. All hearts were nerve to the contest and men from all classes abandoned their homes and firesides and enrolled themselves in the service of their country. That grand and inspiring uprising of the citizen-soldier, fully armed and equipped for battle has no parallel in the history of any age or nation. The men who took part in the various states well deserve the name of the 'Grand Army of the Republic.' It was 'grand' in the numbers and in the loyalty of the men, 'grand' in the purpose which inspired it. Not conquest led it on, but the sentiment of the popular refrain, which sang out on land and sea—

"We are coming, we are coming. Our Union to restore, We are coming Father Abraham, Six hundred thousand strong."

"It was 'grand' in the quality of the men who shouldered the musket and buckled on the sword. Such men as these never before composed an army. They were the nation's best, the touch of elbow and the hand of the 'grand' in the results it achieved. The victory it won over a brave, determined army of the South has no parallel in the history of the world. It has its value precisely proportioned to the measure and men to be overcome. In our Civil War West Point met West Point, volunteer met volunteer. The iron in the blood of our soldiers was in the blood of the soldiers dead of the South. Sincerity strove against sincerity. Prayer presented its petitions against prayer. Not men of alien nature were they; they were our brothers; they fought as men who would not disgrace the family name. And now, thank God, we are brothers once again."

When Lee's army surrendered at Appomattox and General Grant refused to accept the sword of his conquered foe; when he fed the half-starved Confederate army and made them feed their horses as they would need them for the spring ploughing, the era of better things began. The ties of relationship between North and South are ten-fold stronger than ever before, and no one rejoices more than the heroic Confederates that their cause was lost."

DEATH FOLLOWED OVERDOSE OF MEDICINE.

Warren L. Corey's Body Found in Hotel Room at New London.

The dead body of Warren L. Corey, 32 years of age, was found in bed in the room of his friend, Michael McGraw, at the Hartford house, at New London, late Sunday afternoon. An overdose of medicine caused the death, but whether taken accidentally or with suicidal intent is not certain. Until Saturday night Corey, who had been ill, roomed at the home of F. G. Lewis in Golden street, Saturday night he left and went to McGraw's room at the Hartford house. McGraw and Corey arose at the same time Sunday morning and while the former was dressing Corey, according to McGraw, took a paper containing a powder, dissolved the powder in a glass of water and drank it. He then returned to bed, saying that he did not think he would get up until later, and McGraw went out.

Residents of the hotel say that they heard heavy breathing in McGraw's room between 12 and 1 o'clock, but made no investigation. It was about 5:30 o'clock when a friend of McGraw went to the room looking for him and found Corey dead in bed.

Medical Examiner Harry M. Lee stated that Corey had been dead two or three hours. Corey was well known in New London and had for many years been in charge of two officers on the train arriving at 1:17. When led from that train to await the one for Norwich, the unfortunate woman created a commotion at the station platform by attempting to execute some of the modern dances. One of the attendants held her around the waist, but her arms and legs were free and she went through all the motions one

Mr. Edward of New London is to be the next speaker. The class is manifesting great interest in the work and is very enthusiastic.
